If you have never visited the Isaac Winslow House in Marshfield, MA . . . add it to your list of 'must sees'. It is a beautiful old house, imbued with a unique serenity derived from charm, simplicity and understated dignity. A gnarled old 'smoke tree, an all-time favorite of mine, greets you at the door as you take a step back into our historical past.

My photo shoot with Chris Bernstein (cdbphotos.com) was great fun. Knowing exactly what he wanted to achieve, he worked quickly and efficiently, keeping his subject (me) relaxed and at ease. Of the almost 100 shots taken, I chose the two above for my new promotional material: a difficult choice as all of them were excellent. For a bit of seasonal variety, when winter hits we will return to The Winslow House to shoot pics of me in my heavy, wool greatcoat.

My new promotional material will be complete today: simplified to say 'more' with fewer, better chosen words. With my new 'persona' finally in place, approaching 1700s Re-enactment groups will be a top priority. It's time to search my contacts list, focus and move ahead.

My Website, barring any hold-ups, will be spruced up within the next two weeks: adding E-Book links, my new Colonial picture, Outline of Topics for Speaking Engagements and more.

The International Book Expo in Frankfurt, Germany is October 6-10th. My second 3000 Media Count Press Release has gone out and the Newswire (Press) Release follows October 19th. Now I wait for results: something that might realistically take weeks or months while Press Release recipients and Expo attendees think about all the books they have seen . . . and eventually make decisions.

Enjoy the early morning mists and brisk new days. Don't know about you, but I love the fall in all its glory! Best wishes, Joan
